

THE CONFERENCE facilitates academic discourse concerning gender issues in planning, and provides participants from various disciplines and backgrounds, coming from different European countries, with a unique networking opportunity and a chance to broaden perspectives. Practical examples of applied methods will be discussed and compared, as will the theories and methods of those gender-sensitive approaches coming to light within European planning culture. Furthermore, in order to detect possible consequences for spatial planning initiatives, the resulting expansion of knowledge regarding gender specificities in spatial planning will benefit gender research.

The aim of this conference is also to help clearing that path involving the perspectives on gender that have been consolidated in cross-border discourse, research projects, and publications in Europe.

Integrated into the program is a meeting of German and international experts from the inter/ transdisciplinary European GDUS (Gender & Diversity in Urban Sustainability) network, who gather regularly, rotating from one European country to the next, in order to research the gender specific fundamentals and theories of spatial planning, and to compare implementations in Europe.
